This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

Somerset Record Society.

WITH the issue of the twentieth volume the supporters of the Somerset Record Society may consider that it is fairly fulfilling the object of its foundation: "To seek out, edit and print such documents as bear upon the history of Somerset and will aid the future historian of the County." The Society's Proceedings may indeed be said to stand, as it were, mid way between the single volume that contains the registers of a country parish, and the ever-growing series which make known the Public Records of the Kingdom.

It is practically one hundred years since the Government first began to print the Records either in full or in the condensed form of Calendars and Indexes. A misplaced economy stopped the series after 1834, just as a similar error stayed the issue of the six-inch ordnance maps for ten years; and the historian's texts were withheld for a generation.

The interest in the past which Sir Walter Scott directed to the military antiquities of the land, and the Tractarian movement to architectural and ecclesiastical matters; and the greater freedom of movement introduced by the railways, rendered possible the peripatetic meetings of the Institute and the Association, as well as of Local Societies. These soon brought to light the errors and omissions of the older histories; and, by a happy coincidence, at the same period English History began to be studied by three men whose works, ephemeral or permanent, at once caught the attention of the country. While Bishop Stubbs supplied the solid foundations of accurate texts in critical editions, Professor Freeman repeopled mound and castle and abbey with individuals, to whose struggles and politics he contrived to give a curiously modern appearance, and Green supplied the materials for the pathos which ever surrounds the life of the people. The past of England lives again, and every record adds something to the story.

Owing perhaps to the conscientious desire to begin at the very beginning, public and private effort has generally been exhausted before taking in hand the records of the fifteenth century, and in the Government series of Patent and Close Rolls the reigns of Henry IV. and his two immediate successors have been left to the last. Mr. Green has undertaken to edit a volume of Pedes Finium for the reigns of Henry IV. and Henry V. to be issued in 1906. Owing to monetary exigencies the third series of Medieval Wills has been postponed to 1905; and in its place subscribers receive a volume dealing with the question of military defence of the County in the reign of Elizabeth.

During the past summer the records in the Shire Hall at Taunton have been thoroughly overhauled, cleaned, re-arranged and sorted under the direction of the County Council. Although no remarkable discoveries were made, which in their confused condition might almost have been expected, many gaps were filled up, and the various series of documents are probably perfect from the beginning of the seventeenth century. The first step having been made at small cost, the next would be the preparation of a calendar of early Quarter Sessions records.

The Society has to regret the loss of the Right Rev. Bishop Hobhouse, who took a leading part in the foundation and early working of the Society. His editions of Bishop Drokensford's Register for our first volume and of the Medieval Churchwardens' Accounts for the fourth volume are models of accurate and scholarly work, and the last named book in particular has been supplied to students in many parts of the country. The Rev. F. W. Weaver has been chosen to fill the vacancy in the Council.

Preface.

THE certificate herewith printed so well shows the county militia under arms in a very difficult time that but little more need be said about it.

At an early date the crown seems to have had some jealousy of this constitutional and strictly county managed force, and so an important change was gradually brought about, and a new official, the Lord Lieutenant, was created. It is not easy to trace the change, but in 1266, Henry III—yet by and with the consent of Parliament first obtained—managed to have it ordained that in every county there should be a "captain" who, with the sheriff, should have the duty of restraining all robbers and thieves. This captain would be presumably a military man or of a military turn of mind, a check on the perhaps more civilian and county minded sheriff. Certainly as the duties assigned to the two already belonged to the sheriff and he had always sufficient assistance at hand, he might have been left to manage and continue this work without interference. Thus the real object of the appointment does not appear. The plan, if plan it were, gradually developed. Exact particulars cannot be found, but by 1403, 5 Henry IV, the further interference had been established by custom or usage, for the crown to issue directly to special officers what was called a Commission of Array for assembling the county forces, claiming this right for urgent military purposes. In 1404 such a commission was issued as a preparation against a threatened invasion from France, when all men were ordered to arm under pain of imprisonment. Like commissions continued from time to time until superseded by another form, apparently the same thing, but granted now to one individual instead of to several, under the name of a Commission of Lieutenancy. The first mention of the new departure is in 1545, 37 Henry VIII, again in the course of other preparations against France, when John, lord Russell, was assigned as Lieutenant (Locumtenentium) and captain-general of all forces in Dorset, Somerset, Devon, Cornwall, Gloucester, North and South Wales and the marches. The military reason for this was the enlarged district over which a single authority could be exercised. In official papers of Edward VI, in 1551, there is mention of a commission of lieutenancy, but the first mention of a Lord Lieutenant by that name in english is in the Act 4–5 Philip and Mary 1557–8. In 1558 the marquess of Winchester is recorded as Lieutenant of the forces of London and adjacent shires. In 1569, the earl of Sussex was appointed Lord Lieutenant of the north. Thus from a small beginning, by taking advantage of times of difficulty and danger, came the new official who, as the king's nominee, placed the control of the militia forces in the hands of the crown. Next the district appointment presently became a county one, and so the once assistant "captain" ousted from pride of place the sheriff and his aids who had otherwise been so long the actual county chieftains. If the above John lord Russell be excepted the first mentioned Lord Lieutenancy of Somerset was held jointly with Dorset by Sir William Pawlet and lord Mountjoy, who were in office in 1569. Sir William Pawlet (? died 1576) was succeeded in Somerset by the earl of Bedford. He died in 1585, and was succeeded by the earl of Pembroke, who had for his deputies Sir Henry Berkeley and Sir George Sydnam.

The plan for raising any number of men was outwardly as volunteers, but inasmuch as all had to serve, there was behind this a certain feeling of compulsion, not thought of, however, in this time of danger. The man having taken the usual shilling and been sworn to serve for a fixed time, was as firmly enlisted as any soldier, and received pay for his drill days which he was obliged to attend under penalty of a heavy fine. Thus the captain could not only rely on attendance but was himself a man in authority, two important points in a military service, volunteer or otherwise. As time passed, the various companies locally raised and drilled under their local captains, were formed into six regiments of 800 men each, attached to six regimental districts, convenience for muster being still considered. For a time there was a muster once a month, but by 1585, when expectation was strong and the pressure great, each regiment mustered once in fourteen days. There was a regimental muster in the county three days in each week or twelve in a month, so that each regiment assembled twice a month. A great strain and a great cost kept up too for some time. But at such assembling the movements must have been of the simplest, the more especially as any science of warfare or tactics or manœuvring was at the time almost unknown. There was no one method of movement for the whole; no one musketry exercise. Six regiments of eight hundred men each would show only 4,800 selected as under arms instead of the 6,000, as in the certificate, the difference perhaps being in the "unable." A few years later the number had doubled and the return totals 6,770 able and 5,493 unable, and this must have been somewhat the case in 1580, when the total, given undivided, shows in one number as 12,000. The question of the selected, the able and unable, and the armed and unarmed or as the expression was furnished and unfurnished, is often very puzzling. It will be noticed that the commissioners themselves seem not to have agreed on this as the two signed certificates differ in the totals and the name of one commissioner is absent from the first.

As a national militia must always be the greatest and strongest form of national defence, the visible evidence of national unity and strength, one lesson or duty can be learned here, and warning taken—not again to let the subject be "too long intermitted," not to delay preparation until danger be upon us, and so perhaps be too late.

Somerset Muster Roll.

A.D. 1569.

OUR histories tell us that in very early times some plan was adopted for a defensive militia, but what that plan was exactly we are not told. William the Norman, by his laws, ordained that an earl should provide such things as were fitting for his status, and eight horses, four saddled and four unsaddled; four steel caps and four coats of mail; eight javelins and as many shields; four swords and some necessary money. A baron was to have four horses, two saddled and two unsaddled; two swords and four javelins and as many shields, and one steel cap and some necessary money.

Following some such plan in A.D. 1181, Henry II. ordered his judges itinerant to enquire into land values, to enroll every freeman's name, and to see that he had arms of the class and sort due from him. Thus every freeman having a rental or chattels of sixteen marks was to have a coat of mail, a helmet, a lance, and a shield. For ten marks he kept a habergeon (a tunic of mail), a skull cap of iron, and a lance. Smaller properties had at least a jack lined with wool, a skull cap, and a lance.

Again by statute at Winchester, 8 October, 13 Edward I., it was ordained that every man should have in his house harness for to keep the peace "after the antient assize," and all males between fifteen and sixty years of age were to be assessed, and sworn to have armour according to the value of their lands or goods.

Every man of fifteen pounds in lands, or goods of the value of forty marks, was to possess a hauberk (a tunic of mail), a breast plate of iron, a sword, a knife, and a horse.

Ten pounds in land, or twenty marks goods, found a hauberk, a breast plate of iron, a sword and a knife.

Five pounds in land and more, found a sword, a bow and arrows, and a knife.

Less than forty shillings a year had to provide gis-arms (bills), knives, and other less weapons.

All others were to have bows and arrows out of the forest, and in the forest bows and "boults."

In order to raise any men the Council sent down to the sheriff to levy, and he in turn sent his warrant to the constables of hundreds who sent again to the constables of parishes, who in due course brought out their recruits.

Any number of men being levied or enrolled the constable of the hundred was supposed to take a "view" twice a year, and to select the most robust for a little training. Those of medium height and agile frame were mounted, and were then classified or divided into light horsemen and men-at-arms, the latter being for the most part gentlemen able to bear their own expenses and to provide themselves with good horses.

It was estimated in 1551 that 100,000 men of various sorts could be raised; 20,000 being excellent archers; and 20,000 cavalry about one-fourth of these being "men-at-arms." The weakness was that the scheme existed only on paper, there was not sufficient training, attempted musters being rare, only about once in three years. The neglect of this defensive force left England during and especially at the end of popish Mary's reign, apparently weak and exposed to attack, so it happened that Spain, the holder of the Netherlands, and the then terror of Europe, under inspiration from the papacy undertook to reduce the country to obedience.

But it happened also that with the coming of Elizabeth, the Protestant queen, there came too, strong statesmen, supported by a strong national sentiment and will, and attention was soon drawn to this matter of neglected defence. How men could be raised was already understood, so the first question was the proper provision of weapons and armour, both sadly wanting. Great activity consequently ensued in the forging of armour at home, and quick supplies were obtained from abroad.

Besides the question of armour attention was also given to the supply of horses, resulting in a plan that the "following horses and armour should be maintained and kept in readiness for muster."

Every archbishop or duke to keep seven stoned trotting horses of four years old for the saddle; and stallions of four years, under a penalty of £20 for every "vacancy."

Every marquess or bishop of £1,000 land, to keep five stoned trotters. Every bishop, viscount, or baron of 1,000 marks in land to keep three stoned horses.

Every other bishop, viscount, or baron or spiritual person of 500 marks, or temporal person of 600 marks, in land or fees, to keep two trotters; all under the above penalty of £20 for any vacancy.

Every other spiritual person of £100, or temporal person whose wife not divorced wore any gown of silk, velvet kyrtle, petticoat of silk, chain of gold, french hood or bonnet garnished with pearl, stones, or gold, was to provide one trotter on pain of £10. Cart horses and sumpter horses were not to be allowed or recognised under this order; and heirs under age, or heirs apparent having no land either in their own right or their wives, and husbands whose wives were divorced, were exempted from it.

Every person of £1,000 freehold land was to keep six horses or geldings with sufficient saddles and harness, ten light horse or geldings with harness and weapons, forty corslets, forty almain rivets or forty coats of plate, forty pikes, thirty long bows with thirty sheafs of arrows, twenty bills, twenty arqbutts, thirty steel caps, and twenty morrions.

Every person of 1,000 marks (£666 13*s.* 4*d.*) was to keep four geldings two to have harness, six light horse, three corslets, thirty almayn rivets or thirty coats of plate, thirty pikes, twenty long bows with twenty sheafs of arrows, twenty steel caps, ten bills, ten hacqbutts and ten morrions.

Every person of £400 to keep two horses, four geldings, fifteen long bows with arrows, fifteen steel caps, six morrions, and six hacqbutts.

Every person of £200 to keep one horse, two geldings, ten corslets, ten almain rivets (a light armour), ten pikes, eight long bows with arrows, eight steel caps, three morrions and three hacqbutts.

Every person of £100 kept two geldings, three corslets, three almain rivets, three pikes, three long bows and arrows, three steel caps, two morrions and two hacqbutts.

Every person of 100 marks (£66 13*s.* 4*d.*) was to keep one gelding, two corslets, two almain rivets, two pikes, two long bows and arrows, two steel caps, one morrion and one hacqbutt.

Every person worth 1,000 marks in goods to find one light horse for a demi lance, one light gelding or eighteen corslets.

These directions seem founded on the statutes 33 Hen. VIII. and 4–5 Phil. and Mary.

In July, 1565, commissioners were appointed to muster and examine how these various orders were kept, and to have all horses brought before them before september; the curate of every parish to give warning in the church on some "soonday" that all may know they were coming.

Then the smaller properties came under notice more especially for the supply of armour, thus:—

Every person of above £40 land but under 100 marks was to provide two corslets, two almain rivets or two coats of plate, two pikes, one bow, and one sheaf of arrows, one steel cap, two arquebutts, and two murrions.

Every person of £20 and under £40, to find one corslet, one pike, one bow with sheaf of arrows, one steel cap, one arquebus and one murrion.

Every person of £10 and under £20, to find one almain rivet, one bow and sheaf of arrows, one steel cap, one arquebus, and one murrion.

Every person of £5 in land and under £10, to keep one coat of plate, one bow with sheaf of arrows, one steel cap and one halberd or bill.

Personal property was rated as "goods" separately, thus:—

Goods of 1,000 marks (£666 13*s.* 4*d.*) or above found two horses or eighteen corslets, two almain rivets, two coats of plate, two pikes, four bows with arrows, four steel caps, three arquebutts, and three murrions.

£400 and under 1,000 marks found one horse or nine corslets, two almain rivets or two coats of plate, one pike, two bows and arrows, two steel caps and one arquebus.

£200 and under £400 found one corslet, one pike, two bows and arrows, two steel caps, one arquebus and one murrion.

£100 to £200 found one corslet, one almain rivet, one coat of plate, one pike, two bows and arrows, two steel caps, and one brigandine (a quilted and rivetted light armour).

£40 and under £100, found two almain rivets or two brigandines, one bow with arrows, one steel cap, and one halberd or bill.

£20 and under £40 found one almain rivet or one brigandine, two bows with arrows, two steel caps, and one halberd or bill.

£10 and under £20 in goods, found one bow and sheaf of arrows, and one halberd or bill.

Annuitants not included in the above having £30 per annum were charged as for goods.

The penalty for being in default for three months was for every horse £10; for every demi lance £3; for every almain rivet 20*s.*; for a bow and arrows 10*s.*; and for a corslet 40*s.*

The smaller sort, francklyns, farmers, or merchants, not having sufficient value or goods to be assessed to one whole furniture or armour or weapons, were to be induced, by "good persuasions withall" and "love of their country," to join together by two or three or more, to provide either pike, bow, or arquebus.

Enquiries were also made and orders issued as to the number of parks in the county, and the capability for horse breeding and rearing.

Besides these orders for breeding horses and the keeping arms and weapons, "the laws regarding these things having been for long time intermitted," attention was also given to and certain articles considered for the increase in the number and quality of the soldiers, especially arquebusiers and calivers, and to the procuring all things necessary for their use; as many as possible to be calivers.

Up to the time of this story there were four sorts of infantry.

1. Archers, who "abounded," were "very excellent."
2. Bill men, who carried a bill hook set in a short staff, their duty being to strike at and unhorse cavalry. The staff was short "as they liked close quarters."
3. Arquebusiers, or calivers, who were not, at their first introduction, thought of much service.
4. Pikemen, added in the time of Edward VI., who soon became formidable and greatly valued.

By instructions to the Commissioners, the constables of every hundred were to take the names of every householder, and of his servants, apprentices, journeymen, or other sojourners or indwellers, and to see that such householders were ready with armour and weapons when called upon; and to get a perfect knowledge of the number, qualities, abilities, and sufficiency of all from sixteen and upwards, and for what service such may be meet. These being viewed, mustered, and registered, a convenient number was to be chosen at a reasonable charge to the county, tried, and armed and taught, and trained to use, handle and exercise their horses, armour, shot, and other weapons, both on horseback and on foot, for service and defence against all attempts, both inward and outward. Notice was to be taken, what number would be available to serve as labourers or pioneers; and also of the carpenters, smiths, or such like artificers, that "their abilities may be used as cause shall require"; these to serve without armour.

Prelates, lords of parliament, and privy councillors, were to send to the muster—able servants and household men, and farmers were to keep in their houses men fit to serve.

A captain was appointed for certain districts, a man of understanding, worship and credit, a gentleman of skill and experience, usually an inheritor, some chief gentleman or his son, resident in the locality wherein the men were levied, whose influence and wealth were of the greatest importance. The Council having sent down to the sheriff the order to levy, the men were raised or gathered by sound of drum. Here the recruiting party marched through the villages, inviting all who would to serve of their own free will, under the known captain, and the number being gathered, the constables on the appointed day brought out their men. The Commissioners then became the active military officials, and proceeded to choose and weed out "without partiality, malice, injury, or distemperance"; convenience of age, bodily ability, and good character, being considered. The ages between eighteen and forty-six were thought best. Every man thus accepted then received twelvepence, when he became firmly enlisted, and sworn to serve his captain for six months together, and these six months being expired, to serve six months more if required. When discharged, the captain was to allow him half a month's pay at his departing. The month was thirty days, presumably a calendar month. In case any man became unserviceable, his parish or other who found him, was to present three others, able men, to the captain that he may choose one. Any soldier moving from his parish or hundred, or any serving man enrolled to serve on horseback who should leave his service, his parish to do as above. Notice of removal of any man was to be given to the captain a month before, and the three new men to be presented ten or fifteen days before his departure. It was considered that no better way for selecting could be devised, so long as the selection remained in the hands of the few, the "great men," who were inclined to choose those who would be the least expense to the shire. An examination of the names in our certificate will show that whilst all were liable to serve, the better class or well to do volunteered with the others. Possible inconvenience or trouble, as will be seen presently, was at least softened as classes could band together, thus making their work more agreeable for all.

By statute, in 1327, 1 Edward III., it was ordained that no man should be compelled to go out of his shire but where necessity required, or to meet the sudden coming of strange enemies into the realm.

Being duly enlisted, the man received when necessary, conduct money, at the rate of 8*d.* a day, to get him to the place of rendezvous, where he had to appear, clad and armed or unarmed according to orders.

The captain was supposed to have this conduct money and the cost of a coat refunded from the royal exchequer, but the county bore all other charges for arms and apparel. Besides the coat or cassock of broadcloth, which for those in the same company would be of the same colour, usually the livery colour of the captain, the soldier received a pair of venetian hose, a doublet of canvas, a strong hat or cap, two "shoortes" of linen cloth, two bands of holland cloth, two or three pairs of kersey stockings, and two or three pairs of shoes. The municipal accounts of Bath record the payment of 4*s.* 11½*d.* for four and half ells of canvas for two coats for soldiers. Some being of "sufficient wealth," found their own arms and apparel. As there was no official uniformity, the question of the clothing was a source of argument and trouble, as a fit and proper supply would clearly go far towards efficiency. It was suggested that the cloth should be of a fresh colour, red, murrey, tawny, or scarlet, such as would make "a gallant show," the "hosen" to be easy to march and fight in. The word hosen, the pretty plural of hose, included usually more of the costume than it would to-day. All, horse and foot, wore grey gescoes, originally grey gascoines, so called from the gascoine the inner part of the thigh. The fashion of the time, much "bombasted and blistered," short and straight to the thighs and upper parts, and not reaching to the knee, besides its great "uneasiness" with so much "bombast," kept the men exceedingly hot in the summer time. Instead of these, preference was urged for grey gescoes extending to below the knee, large, wide, and easy, lined with cotton lining without any bombast, and next the thigh a strong canvas lining to which the "nether stocking" could be gartered.

The captain was generally allowed to select his own subalterns, usually local gentlemen of lesser wealth. But he was not to think too much of himself, delegating his work to the lieutenant, whilst he himself stayed either at Court "to pursue some new hope," or in the city to buy new clothes. All being chosen and the men sorted, the training was done locally to save trouble and cost, each captain making his own arrangements. Vintiniers were appointed over twenty men, and deceniers over ten; these kept the rolls and reported deaths. They were known as whifflers, a name given to a wooden sword. But the active men for training were the corporals of whom there were four to each company of one hundred men, each corporal thus having under him twenty-four men. They trained apart "in bands" and taught "all tyros and men unwarlike." Their duty, too, with the vintiniers and deceniers, was to know where every man could be called and found "in an instant." Every man being called repaired to the place where his armour was kept, and then marched armed to the place appointed. Here the sergeant, who wore a scarf over his shoulder and carried a halberd as emblem of his office or rank, took the men in hand and put them in array. Now also at such company parade the Muster Master came on the scene and looked around for "abuses and lacks." Any such were to be remedied by penalty, either upon the parish that sent the man, or upon the private rich man who had sent him, or upon the defaulter himself should he have armed and furnished himself. Absentees were to be commanded to appear by precept. The penalty for non-attendance was ten days or forty shillings. By Act 4–5 P. and M. the Muster Master for taking a bribe was mulcted in ten times the amount received. Captains were to keep up the number of their men and to give them their full pay; for any "abridgement" of pay, the captain forfeited by 3 Hen. VIII., all his goods and chattels and his body to prison. Again, in 4–5 P. and M. for withholding pay, the captain forfeited treble the sum withheld, and for "corruptly" discharging a man he forfeited ten times the sum received. All offences of the captain during service were to be tried by the Lord Lieutenant or other "chieftayne."

The Muster Master, who was a man of some social status, must have often had trouble. On calling the roll, if he did his work carefully, he made every man alight to view him well, to see that no buckle or weapon was wanting, and to see how the man wore his armour, his hosen and grey gescoes, his boot hosen and spurs, whether "aptly, like a horseman or like a clown." Then he viewed the horse for anything lacking or whether broken-winded or lame. He had also a further trouble, as during intervals between musters, men changed their services and new men had to be substituted, who often appeared, a medium-sized man in a tall man's armour and a tall man in a small man's, "in such sort that many are uneasily and unfitly armed."

The drill being over the men marched home and delivered in their armour.

The question of the care and storage of the weapons and armour was often a troublesome one. Near towns all went fairly well as convenient places could be chosen and rented. In other cases when the armour was diversely placed, some in the house of the chief man of the neighbourhood, some with the captains or other local gentlemen, and some with the corporals who had it under pretence of keeping it clean and against any sudden rising if left with the men, there was frequent trouble. Sometimes it was deposited in the parish church. The favoured plan was that it should be kept in the rich men's houses who found it, and any found by the parish should be kept in the chief man's house in the parish, as such men would be more careful of armour bought at their own charge. But the fetching and re-delivering the armour was found very burdensome and became very distasteful to the men, so the plan was changed, and all was carried to the rendezvous in sacks or panniers. As, however, every such movement or transport caused some damage, this plan was again changed and next every man was granted, besides his pay, a penny per mile for fetching his armour provided the distance did not exceed six miles. Surveyors were appointed in every hundred to visit houses and stores and see that all weapons were kept clean and ready.

Facilities for practice were to be given, and for this butts of earth were provided, twenty feet broad and sixteen feet high, having boards thereon a yard and a half wide with black roundels and a white in the centre. At this the men "standing comely" levelled their pieces at from seventy-five to a hundred and fifty yards. First the recruit, to habituate him to his weapon and embolden him, was to use "false fire," the pan only being primed, then to use half a charge of powder in skirmishing, then the full charge, and then the bullet, so from familiarity ever after his eye would become accustomed to the "flashe of the fier" and he would not shoot at random. As an encouragement, "because it is not lawful for any person but such as by statute are thereto licensed" to shoot with any hand gun or arquebus her majesty was pleased to grant the privilege that all appointed to be arquebusiers may use their weapons without danger to the law, "so as they do not use the same otherwise than others do that are by the statute licensed."

The ranges were to be so situated that "none travel far to them." The practice to be twice a month on holidays or work days, not on a sunday, one J.P. besides the officers to be present, and all other games to be avoided on practice days. Prizes were awarded, the best being for the arquebus, the next for the long bow. The bow is thus seen declining in importance. The inhabitants were expected to maintain the necessary storehouses and ranges and to find bullets and powder, especially such as had parks, warrens of conies, dovehouses, etc., and used hawking, "as all such will be better preserved if the use of the arquebus be adopted." It was even suggested that every J.P. should find one arquebus in his parish beside the one charged by statute, or be omitted from his office. The clergy were to find arquebusiers or contribute to their maintenance; every such having a cure of £20 a year and upwards and not residing upon it two months in the year to find one in that parish, or his wages for twenty-four days at ninepence a day.

By order of the 26th March, 1569, the sheriff was to examine, search, and try the various questions here before noticed as to men and armour "so that all and every, being viewed, arrayed, and prepared, may be ready always to serve"; and he was to make a return by the 1st July, 1569, of the names of all the horsemen, footmen, archers and arquebusiers in his county. The result was the following full report sent up by the Commissioners. Similar reports must have been made generally, but as was probably the case, such being sent up by each hundred separately some have disappeared, so making the remainder imperfect. The return herewith printed, not only contains the whole county, every parish as well as every hundred, but also the names of the soldiers in every parish and the weapons carried, and also a list of all the parks, and the names of all the gentlemen with the armour and horses provided by or due from them.

It could not be more complete and perhaps as such is quite unique.

Endorsed.

Certificate of the Musters of the Countie of Somerset brought to the Lords of the Council, 17th July, 1569.

Explanatory Notes.

After an examination of this most interesting document some remarks on the arms and armour, pay and commissariat, of the time, will fairly help to make the position clear.

The Arms and Armour.

There is nothing to show that the suggestions or rules already noticed for providing arms were closely followed. The local orders issued, if any, have not been met with, so what exactly occurred cannot be said, but it will be seen clearly enough that wealth and position fairly determined the contribution. The Commissioners doubtless in their discretion took care that the scale was according to ability. In this they could have had no difficulty. All backed up willingly, every tithing found a corslet, the various hundreds produced "of benevolence" more than the required quota, and the smaller people "two or three or more," are seen to have united for "love of their country" to provide some weapon; even the widow found a bow and arrows. The bows and arrows are not totalled in the hundreds as they were generally privately owned or provided by the archer himself. There seems to have been a great want of armour. The calivers in stock and the gunners to use them always agree in number in every hundred, as also do the corslets and the pikes. Both these arms were carefully cared for, the others had to wait, except that the archers could provide their own jacks. The small number of horsemen must be noted and these are all found by the gentlemen. There is no example of any mounted man or tenant as finding his own horse.

Before formal drill could be commenced a selection was made of the best or most suitable men for the different arms. A tall man was considered best for a pike; a mean or middle-sized man for a halberd; and a little nimble person for a piece or shot. In the certificate the archers are seen still well to the fore, but it happens that just from this time they declined rapidly in importance, so that soon there were practically, besides the horsemen, but two classes, pikes and "shot." All drill was based on the company of one hundred men, there being an ensign to every such company. But as in other things there was no uniformity, no one plan, as to how the arms should be divided or apportioned. Some thought as "assorted in most proportion," that every company of a hundred men should have forty pikes, fifty shot, and ten bills; but others thought twenty archers, forty pikes, and forty shot, the better plan: another thought there should be forty pikes, thirty shot, and thirty archers; whilst a little later others preferred thirty pikes and seventy shot. Probably counties or districts differed as in other respects according to local circumstances or necessity.

The Pikeman.

By the time or date of our document the pike took the lead as the principal warlike weapon, as the "strength and bulwark of the field," the "queen of arms for infantry," the "most honourable," the weapon of "greatest credit" for a soldier on foot, the "place for a gentleman to serve in," and as especially suited for the "fronts" which served "in the place of gentlemen." The pikeman carried a dagger, and a sword broad and made to slice, and wore a complete corslet with all pieces appertaining as cuirass, gorgets, shoulder and arm pieces, and also long taces for the thighs. On his head he carried a helmet or burgonet, so named as being introduced from Burgundy, ornamented by a plume or otherwise, well lined and quilted within and with projecting side and fore and back pieces to shade or cover the face or neck, and having a ring attached behind by which it could hang for relief on the march. The municipal accounts of Bath show a payment of 4d. for 1 lb. of wool to stuff a head-piece, and again of 2d. for stuffing a murrion. The pikeman of all others was always fully "furnished." There was another sort, a light armed pikeman who had only the fore part of a corslet "as was the almain rivet," or a good light jack, or a coat of plate, and a head piece. The almain rivet, its origin German as the name implies, in this case was a breast and thigh armour only, the part below the waist covering the upper thigh being made of overlapping pieces attached by rivets made to work or slide in slots and so play freely up and down one over the other to the great ease of the wearer. In other cases—as a pair of almain rivets—it would be a complete harness, a salet or head piece, a back plate and a breast plate, always with jointed pieces working in slots over the thighs. The pike varied in length and was known as long, three quarters, and short. Fifteen feet would seem to have been the usual length. Sixteen feet and a half was also recommended, as was also seventeen feet or eighteen feet. The wood was to be of stiff ash, not of ash that would "sagge" or bend, as this latter although more tough was also heavier and could not be "carried straight at the enemies face." The flat steel point or head was strengthened at the sides by iron bands or cheeks as a protection against sword cuts.

The drill was chiefly to trail, push, ward, couch, and cross. The postures were:—

Standing { "Lay down / "Take up / "Order } Your pike.'

Marching { "Advance" / "Shoulder" / "Levell" / "Slope" / "Cheeke" / "Trayle" }

Charging { "Port" / "Charge-over,-under-hand." / "Couch" / "Charge--at the right foot."

On the order—"Advance your pikes."—The left hand was laid on the forepart of the pike about a foot or more before the right hand, then advancing two steps, the first with the left foot, and therewith raising the pike upright with both hands, the butt end was set on the ground point upwards. This being done by the front rank with "comely and soldierly grace," the second and other ranks one after the other did the same.

On the order—"Shoulder your pike and march."—The pike was laid on the right shoulder leisurely and comely, the butt carried about three feet from the ground all to be level, straight towards the ham of the man in front.

To prepare for horsemen: On the order—"Upright your pikes."—The butt end was taken in the palm of the right hand and carried to the "boult" of the arm, point upwards.

On the order—"Straighten and close your ranks, couch your pikes and charge."—The point was dropped breast high, all being held firmly with both hands, the point full in the face of the enemy. The rear rank meanwhile carrying the point of the pike over the shoulder of the front rank ready to drop or lower it as required.

If charged by lances or horsemen: On the order—"Straighten and close your ranks, couch your pikes and make head."—The men closed up, set the butt end of the pike under the right foot firmly, held the pike with the left hand a yard and a quarter from the butt end, and leaned the right knee strongly on the pike, the point very low, as if towards the breast of a horse; meantime swords to be drawn in the right hand, the points forward, ready to kill or hough any barbed horse that may break in. The front rank thus almost kneeling, the second rank did the same movements, but holding the pike point higher, full in the eyes of the horse or enemy. Thus the men, keeping solidly shoulder to shoulder, were so close together that horsemen could make no impression on them, "as easily shall a bare finger pierce through the skin of an angry hedgehog as any encounter the front of their pikes." There was one curious idea that any pikers who were left-handed should practise their pikes with the right hand, and "because such left-handed soldiers wear their swords upon the right side" they should be placed in the inner ranks.

When the "coronell" or captain wished to change front, he went to the side or flank intended and standing there, cried, "Front to me, soldiers." So also he went to the rear when he wished "to make the back front." The ensign bearer, who was placed in the centre well guarded, was to carry his ensign upright, not to "fetch flourishes about his head with the staff and taffeta" as the "ensign bearers of London do upon midsummer night." Just now was introduced the expression "colours" when speaking of the ensign, which greatly annoyed the older people, who inveighed strongly against this use of new terms.

The Caliver.

The caliver was much the same as the arquebus. It had a "deformed" stock, thus differing somewhat, was longer and heavier, and being larger in the bore it carried a larger bullet. It required a pound of lead to make twenty bullets, and one pound of powder served for thirty shots. The name seems to have come from calibre, the two words being found synonymous, as when a cannon is mentioned of the caliver of 3 lb. bullet. Some preferred this weapon to the arquebus, supposing from its larger bore it was more powerful, but even then its weight was against it and it was disliked by the men; thus eventually the arquebus took its place. Another weapon, the corier or coryver, is sometimes mentioned; it was rather longer than the caliver but of the same bore and carried the same ball.

The Arquebus.

The arquebus, sometimes miscalled a caliver, the next favourite weapon as "shot," was fairly light and about a yard in length. Whilst considered of great use in woods or other ambush it was also especially the weapon for skirmishing as being "maniable," hence the smaller and younger men were chosen for this service as more nimble to traverse the ground. The name is found spelled in several ways, and also as hacqbutt or hagbut, and so leads to the thought that different weapons may be intended, which may not always be the case. Hacqbutt was the earlier name for the first form of the weapon; the slight differences or improvements from time to time must account for the slight after-differences in the name.

An Act, 33 Hen. VIII., cap. 6, concerning crossbows and handguns, orders that no person should have any handgun other than being in the stock and gun of the length of one whole yard, or any hagbutt or demy hake other than shall be in the stock and gun the length of three-quarters of a yard. Handgun sometimes meant what would to-day be called a pistol.

The barrel was at this time called the cannon. The arquebus was in fact from origin a cannon in little, a diminutive cannon, reduced to "maniable" size. The earliest form was simply this "cannon" with the usual touch hole at the breach end to which a lighted match—incandescent prepared rope—was applied by the hand to ignite the powder, as was the case with the cannon proper. To avoid this plan of lighting which really employed one arm, next was introduced attached to the stock, a simple iron lever in which the match was fixed, and this, working on a pivot, being moved gradually by one finger, left the right arm free from strain and brought the light accurately to the touch hole at the breach end, more exactly and more easily than the man's hand could do it. Then came a further improvement, when the lever carrying the lighted match was moved by a spring and so jerked down on a pan, attached to the touch hole, which contained special priming powder. The touch powder and the pan received very careful attention. There were three ways of loading, first with the flask, second with covered charges carried on a bandolier, and thirdly with cartridges; in the last plan the powder and bullet were put in together. In either case the scouring stick or ramrod had to be used to thrust in paper on the bullet. Then the match, which was carried wound round the bandolier, required management, as if put in the cock or serpentine not the right length exactly to strike in the pan there would be a misfire, or if too long and lithe and so allowed to hang down it would double up short of the pan; or if at all damp the fire burned inwards, leaving a beard outwards and so the powder would not be ignited. Against this possible dampness the soldier was cautioned in times of rain or mist, to keep his powder dry, his match covertly in his hand, and the touch hole of his piece under his arm. He also sometimes carried a thick covering or protection known as saltenbergs or mandillions—a loose kind of jacket. For reasons which will be more clear presently the weapon was very ineffective. It was considered useless to fire at above twenty or at most fifty yards, and when firing at horsemen at not more than twelve. To fire at eight or ten score, as was often done, was "a very scorn," such being "more meet to scare crows" than work effect against an enemy. The arquebusier at first received no quarter from the older fashioned fighter; he was a ruffian who by using a bullet or shot violated all the laws of honourable warfare.

The drill commands as skirmishers were:—

"Inlarge, inlarge soldiers, inlarge" (i.e., extend).

"To your advantage soldiers, to your advantage" (i.e., take all cover possible).

"Wing, wing soldiers to the right."

"Wing, wing soldiers to the left."

"Avaunce, avaunce forward soldiers."

"Troop, troop and flank soldiers" (i.e., to draw skirmishers together).

"Retire, retire and front soldiers."

"Charge, charge and execute soldiers."

On this last order all were to "enter with fury" upon the enemy, and with "puissant hand" do execution upon him.

Being in square: On the order—"Discharge soldiers, and to your knees and charge again volley after volley."—The first and second ranks fired, then fell on one knee to load, when the third and fourth ranks fired and in turn knelt to load, so to allow the fifth and sixth ranks to fire over their heads. The distance, however, was often so little considered, was often so great, the bullets "worked as much effect as the stars." Then the men being so little in the field were unskilful when working and wheeling thickly together, so that they fired in haste and often heated their pieces or killed their comrades.

The Bill and the Halberd.

The bill was originally say, a scythe, with but one cutting edge or side, fixed on a shaft; next both sides were sharpened, thus increasing its power as a thrusting weapon, then a hook with a cutting edge was added on one side to hook and cut the bridle of a horseman. Generally a spike projected from the back. It thus formed a pike and axe combined. We have still a tool known as a bill hook. Slight differences in the shape of the cutting edge or edges caused the differences met with in the name. The billman was furnished usually with almain rivets.

The halberd was often superior, better made or more ornamented than the bill and used perhaps by the better class. The English halberd was really a battle-axe with short points, long edges, and a short stave about four feet nine inches long. As actual contact in fight was almost a necessity, this was an important and valued weapon. It served well in the sack of a town, in a breach, in a sally, to enter a house, or in a crowd "to execute slaughter." Another fashion, the Italian, had long points, short edges, and long staves, being thus more like a pike. Placed within a squadron or square these were thought the better by some, but wrongly so, said the older sort, looking always to the English haste to get to close quarters, as after the first encounter short weapons with swords or daggers must be used, whereas the long staves with points could then do no harm. In one form occasionally noted as a gleye or glaive the chief difference was that its cutting edge was convex. The halberds formed the guard to the captains and ensigns, and were mostly chosen from men of the middle strength, of the better sort, from gentlemen of experience, "who, as occasion serveth, help to give order to the numbers in array." On approaching an enemy they were sent in advance as an example to the others, so by their discreet leading and valiant bearing to encourage the rest to follow. They were furnished with corslets much as the pikemen, and were placed in the heart of battle usually called the "slaughter of the field."

Archers.

Archers by our return or certificate are seen to be many, to be the chief stay, but it was just from this time or date that the great event occurred, the introduction or adoption of the musket, an enlarged arquebus, as a military weapon, which altered their position or importance and eventually superseded them.

The archer wore a scull or skull, a plain iron head piece or brain pan without brim or ornament, and like all others he carried a sword and dagger. His further protection was the very old one, the jack, lighter and cheaper and less cumbersome than armour of iron and suitable for his work as leaving his arms fairly free. The jack proper was of leather, or fustian, or canvas, or linen, over stout quilting or other stuffing for the body part, but with only ordinary sleeves for the arms. Perhaps the introduction of firearms caused it to be strengthened by the addition of iron or other hard material sewn on the front quilting under the outer canvas.

An Elizabethan state paper of this time gives an account of the charges, "for making 1,500 jackes plated before, for the furniture of the Queene's maties shippes." For these there were used:—

3,700 ells of cloth for the inner lyninge after the rate of two ells and a half to a piece, at 4*d.* the ell.

Sockeram for the outside and weltinge the same, 3,000 ells at the rate of two ells to a Jacke, at 12*d.* the ell.

Cross bowe threade to fasten the plates, 750 lbs. after half a lb. to a Jacke, at 8*d.* the lb.

Tow, 9,000 lbs. weight at 6 lbs. to a Jack.

Cutting 960 pieces of old armour into plates and 700 other plates. And lastly,

Pack thread, wax, pitch, tallow and rosin to temper the thread and cutting the cloth ready, with thread, needles, nails, webb, and iron pins for the frames. The total cost being £779 6*s.* 8*d.*

Besides the small squares or pieces of iron as above noted, horn, the hoof of the horse, or sometimes cuir bouilli, boiled leather, was used, the pieces sewn together on a backing in the same way and the front then covered. Not necessarily much padded, this was fairly supple, but if with iron was often heavy enough, perhaps fifteen pounds or even more.

A jack is sometimes mentioned as furnished with splints; these were short thin strips of iron, "harness for the arms," sewn, or fastened on the sleeves, the strips running lengthwise upwards and downwards. The plan was adopted usually with the lighter armour such as the almain rivet and the cote of plate.

On the schoulder felle the stroke,
A grete splente owt hyt smote.

The word means also any thin strip of wood. A poem of 1594 says:—

> Or wilt thou in a yellow boxen bole,
> Taste with a wooden splint the honey sweet.

In a still smaller size we get to the splinter.

Sometimes, even as private property on land, but always at sea in the royal navy, the jack bore before and behind, as of old time, the English red cross on a white ground, thus making the name, the English Jack, which, united with other national crosses, has given a name to the national flag.

The brigandine was another, a superior form of jack, a quilted or stuffed tunic covered entirely with overlapping, quite small pieces or plates of iron rivetted together; over these was an outer cover often of gay coloured material, the rivet heads, sometimes of brass, showing through this in a regular and pretty ornamental fashion.

Jacks could be made at home and so could be made to suit exactly the wishes and requirements of the owners. Hence the difference and variety in make.

The coat or cote of plate, occasionally mentioned, was not a jack. It was complete in itself, formed of several plates of metal of fair size or width, attached or held together in the lower part by rings or wires, or fixed on linen or pliable leather. The convenience was the absence of rigidity by the movement of the plates, which, on the body leaning forward, overlapped by sliding upwards. It was lighter than and should rank perhaps next after the almain rivet.

Uniformity was not imperative, and was not attempted; in case of necessity to distinguish a company, the man wore a uniform coloured ribbon on the left arm; but every man was provided with or had to provide some sort of protection. A "naked" man, a man without armour, was considered useless.

By early laws of Parliament penalties were decreed against those who neglected the maintenance of "artillerie." By 33

Henry VIII. (1541–2) certain penalties were ordered, and this and other Acts being now reviewed, it was decreed that any master who suffered his servant or any father who suffered his son being under the age of seventeen to lack a bow and arrows for the space of a month, for every default, instead of the old penalty of six shillings and eight pence, should pay three shillings and four pence or not less than twenty pence. Any male over seventeen and under fifty-nine being able to shoot, lacking a bow and four arrows for a month, instead of six and eight pence, should pay not above three shillings and four pence nor below six pence. Any bowyer who for every bow of yew did not make four others of elm, wych, hazel, ash, or other wood, was to forfeit for every bow lacking, instead of three and four pence, not above twenty pence nor under ten pence. Every bowyer was to have bows of yew at all prices, from six pence to twelve pence for youth; or between fourteen and twenty-one at reasonable prices; if he sold any bow of yew above three and four pence for every one sold, instead of twenty shillings, he was to pay not above ten shillings nor less than five shillings. The prices before were two shillings for an English bow and six and eight pence for a foreign. Butts were to be provided by the inhabitants of every parish, and in default for neglect for three months, instead of the old penalty of twenty shillings, now not to be more than ten shillings nor less than five. The modifications here in the penalties seem to mark for us a relaxation and change in the old feeling towards archery. Whilst great attention continued to be given to it, and the bow was greatly valued, differences of opinion began to be expressed on its merits as against the arquebus. The archer, it was argued, seemed to serve but small purpose except when sheltered by some trench or other bulwark protected from shot, or as when lining a band of arquebusiers in an invading onset, when a flight of arrows would terribly gall any footmen or squadron of horse. On the other hand it was claimed that archers far exceeded and excelled all arquebusiers in three principal points. The archers were far more ready with their volleys, and could discharge four or five arrows before the others could discharge one bullet, as instead of the trouble of loading, having the bow already bent, they had only to draw their arrows, nock them, and shoot. Again, volleys of arrows flying together thickly in the air not only terrified and amazed the ears, eyes, and hearts, of both horses and men, but flying in the air as "thick as snow with a terrible noise much like a tempestuous wind preceding a tempest," did not leave in a whole squadron one man or horse unhurt. A pretty picture this of a flight of arrows, by one who must have known. Wounded horses too with the arrows sticking and hanging in them, fell kicking and plunging, so that the squadron or troop became disordered and some riders were thrown. Whereas a horse wounded by a shot, which terrified by "smoke and noise rather than hurt by its bullet," after the first feeling of pain may pass on. No horseman, it was argued, could abide arrows. A sheaf of arrows was twenty-four, and as a hint how supply was kept up Stowe tells that after the battle of Crecy the English refilled their exhausted quivers by drawing arrows from their dead enemies.

With the other sort of arms the man was chosen to suit his weapon, but with the archer his weapon was chosen to suit him; his age, his power of draught and strength being considered. The bow was usually of his own height, light and easy, well backed and nocked, and the string whipped with fine thread or silk. He was told to wear gloves not leathers called finger stalls. He had nothing upon his arms to hinder their use that he may draw his arrow to the head and deliver the same with strength as "Englishmen be accustomed." The bow, when bent, became about half its length, and could carry to four hundred yards, but the usual practice distance was from two hundred to two hundred and forty yards, and a trained archer could shoot twelve arrows a minute. The archer sometimes carried a "maule," also called a "dropper," a wooden or leaden mallet, whose use can only be imagined. Bishop Latimer, in a sermon in 1549, said, "the arte of shutynge hathe ben in tymes past much esteemed in this realme. Justices now be no justices. Charge them that thys singular benefit may be practised and that it be not turned into tollyng and glossyng. In my tyme my father taught me how to draw, how to lay my bodye in my bowe, and not to draw wyth strength of arms, as other nacions do, but wyth strength of bodye. I had my bowes bought me according to my age and strength, as I increased in them so my bowes were made bigger and bigger, for men shall never shute well excepte they be brought up in it."

In the drill the officer called—"Rank yourselves, archers."—When the men formed eight or more in a rank. Then the officer going to the flank, called—"Front to me, archers." Whereupon all the soldiers turned accordingly. Crossbows and bows having been inspected and found in good order, the archer mounted and galloped, and passing some mark set up, drew two or three arrows one after the other, and drawing each to the head discharged them three or four scores off. He was told to use three fingers not two, "a fond new fashion." The crossbow being mounted, discharged his quarrell at thirty paces off, and presently with his gaffle bent his crossbow and discharged a second quarrell. It was argued that bands of men thus horsed and armed would be of far more service than firearms on horseback, as they could wound and kill at three score yards off or further, whereas the argolletiers and pistolletiers could not work any effect above ten yards, or fifteen yards at the furthest, and if the enemy were single, then not above four or five yards off "unless they would fail five times before they hit once."

On a comparison between carabins, argolletiers, and reisters—"weapons of fire" on horseback—as against crossbows and archers on horseback, the crossbow was declared the best, although the bow from its lightness had many friends. The crossbow, which discharged a quarrell or square-headed bolt, carried far and struck forcibly, was capable of extreme accuracy say up to a hundred yards, and was a favourite weapon, but besides being heavy, its rather clumsy form and difficult handling destroyed all its advantages. Besides these weapons there was the steel bow "which flieth twenty score yards" and could discharge twice as fast as the crossbow.

Much trouble was taken with or about the bow. The English bow in early days was in one piece, the best being of yew. Foreign yew was preferred, especially the Venetian, but Flemish and Spanish were also used. Merchants trading to such parts were to import four bow staves with every tun of Malmsey wine, and to encourage this, staves of six feet and a half in length were exempted from duty. By other regulations to preserve, or prevent waste of yew, bowyers were to make four bows of some other wood for every one they made of yew, and youths under seventeen were to use the English make. In the time of Henry VIII. some relief came for the yew difficulty, when it was found that two short pieces of yew joined or spliced together, and then a piece of tough wood such as lancewood or ash in one piece laid on and firmly fixed from nock to nock, an effect equal to a bow in one piece was obtained. Bows in one piece were called self bows, and the others—backed.

Then the arrow was the source of much attention and pride. Fifteen woods could be used for it, but of these some made "dead, heavy, lumpish, cobling" shafts; others from weakness made "hollow, starting, scudding, gadding" shafts. Birch, hornbeam, ash, and some oak being strong enough to stand in the bow and light enough to fly far, were preferred, and of these hornbeam was thought the best. But every man chose according to his own strength. The arrow was to be round and made as the "grain lyeth" or it would not fly clean, and it seems to have been a matter of importance that it should be feathered from a grey goose wing:

> The grey goose wing that was thereon
> In his heart's blood was wet.

Arrows differed somewhat in length or weight, according to the purpose intended, and also according to the strength of the man. The flight arrow for long distance was long and thin; the sheaf arrow had a heavier shaft, sometimes tipped with a barbed head. The cloth yard shaft of which we read, was the Flemish yard of twenty-seven inches, as in early days the English market exporting wool received in return Flemish cloth, and thus their yard became a recognised cloth measure. Sometimes an arrow is alluded to as three-quarters of the standard, meaning three-quarters of our standard yard, which again would be twenty-seven inches.

> A hundred sheaf of arrows good
> And every arrow an ell long.

This removes the apparent difficulty of firing a three feet arrow from a six feet bow. The strength or knack necessary to great skill, could only be acquired in youth, but the pride was great when acquired. Practice by a constant shooting at butts or other marks was imperative. The marks were butts, pricks, and rovers. The butt was a fixed target, having figures thereon marking the value of each hit. A complete scene of the whole proceeding is well and clearly depicted in a piece of tapestry in Hardwick Hall.

The prick was a stick upright, "a màrk of compass" at a fixed distance.

> Twice Robin shot about
> And ever he clave the wand.

The rover was, as its name implies, at some uncertain or changing distance. A special arrow and special feather were considered necessary for each practice. Arrows were used in warfare for shooting fire shafts.

The Company.

Given the usual one hundred men, the solid square was the ordinary formation. The arquebusiers were placed in front and rear in respect to the lightness of their weapon and furniture, as being the most ready for skirmish or ambush, and consequently the first to be employed at the first onset. Thus a company of say forty arquebusiers, forty pikes, and twenty archers in close column with a front of ten men would have half the arquebusiers in front, say two ranks of ten in each; then behind them half the archers, ten in one rank; and after these, half the pikes in two ranks of ten each. After these would come the ensign and his halberds in the centre. Next, now repeating, would be the other half of the pikes in two ranks; in the rear of these the other half of the archers, and after them, again in two ranks of ten each, the other half of the arquebusiers; thus completing the square. If the men faced about to "make the back front" the same arrangement remained.

The intention was that the rear ranks could be "drawn out" to support the others in front, or to "make a sleeve" on the flanks of either weapon or on either flank.

The movements were made by stroke of drum, the drums and "phiphes" keeping their place with the ensign in the centre. Whosoever "followeth not his ensign whithersoever it shall go" was liable to sharp punishment. The drum beat a call, a march, a troupe, a battalia, a charge, a retreat, a battery, and, a relief. Sometimes word of command instead of being given aloud was passed quietly down the ranks so that none heard but those immediately concerned. Skirmishing was done in threes, but it was advised later that fours were better as giving more time to load. The four advancing the foremost having fired retired to the rear to load, the second in turn doing the same until all had fired, retired, re-loaded, and re-advanced. A work which took some time.

In marching through a town the captain leading marched in front in his corslet complete, his lieutenant also armed in the rear. But it was allowed that the captain's page may carry his burgonet and target that he might march more lightly with his sword and leading staff. Should he ride he was not to have a lively swift horse, "it is a shame to him" as his men may suspect his intention to disappear in difficult moments; he was rather to ride a simple hackney that would only gallop "a Canterbury pace." Here we get the origin of our word canter. He was to visit the men's lodgings to see all arms kept clean and the halberds sharp. Six principal points were to be impressed on the soldier—silence, obedience, secretness, sobriety, hardiness, and truth.

Demi Lances.

Of the horsemen the demi lances were the older form, being gentlemen of the first rank who armed themselves cap à pie and had horses "very puissant all barbed before and behind." They had good saddles with head stall and chain and good petrells (chest protectors) and croupers. Some used tocks, a long narrow sword for thrusting only, very conveniently worn under the thigh. They wore a scull or burgonet, a jack, or a coat of plate, or else the almain rivet, or the carett (the front and back) of a corslet, the arms being sometimes protected by splints. The lance was 10 feet long against the more recent length of 18 feet of the light horseman, hence they were known as demi lances. They were in fact the heavy cavalry of the time, the original men-at-arms.

There was another body known as voluntaries, but generally these would seem to have been the same or nearly the same as demi lances. Some were noblemen, some gentlemen, some yeomen, all "free men, good men, and able men." They armed themselves and thus eased the public purse. They passed no musters, received no pay, but lived at their own cost. They claimed respect from the other soldiers and some privileges. In all marches they claimed the most honourable place and generally proved more diligent than any mercenary. At first they were but few, a special few banding together, but the number so increased that they became a mob of "unruly colts," a torrent which overwhelmed all discipline and caused confusion in marching, fighting, and lodging and victualling. The generals therefore stopped and abolished the system and ordered all to be enrolled under some captain. A whole regiment was once embarked for foreign scrvice, some on an inflammation of courage being led to this by their own ambition, some "by their wives," and "some (as they say dogs go to church) for company's sake."

Light Horsemen.

Next, and the most numerous, were the light horsemen, a newer style than the men-at-arms. They were composed of the better class, even knights and gentlemen and their servants, and so could work well together. The man was armed with a jack, or a coat of plate, his head protected by a scull or burgonet of iron, and the sleeves of his doublet striked down with small chains, or splints, of iron for defence against the sword. The horse was to be of a good sort "meet to gallop roundlie." They carried a lance or spear, by some, called a gad, which it was considered should be 18 feet long, as it could then be used not only to charge from the thigh, but by taking hold in the middle, could be worked as a "punching stave," both backward and forward. There was another kind of light horseman, but very rarely mentioned, called a stradiot, armed, as adopted from the Moors, with a double-headed lance or zagaya, having an iron point at both ends, which had the familiar name of a "punching iron." The punching stave and the punching iron must have been the same, save perhaps, that in some cases both ends were shod with iron. As light horse, both were considered of use against men in disorder, and in a chase were expected to do great execution. In his drill he was to gallop as if in actual action, and to use his lance backward and forward, as if in chase, then suddenly to cast away the lance, as if broken or lost, and draw and fire his pistol, and then to pull up the cock and put the pistol into its case, and draw his sword with dexterity, ready for a closer encounter. The semi-circular formation was recommended.

Carabins.

The Carabins, Argolletiers, and Reisters, or pistolletiers on horseback, were by some much thought of, but were not generally appreciated.

Besides the difficulty of loading a piece on horseback, it was considered useless to fire at more than six paces or ten at the farthest, as considering the uncertainty and the movement of the horses, they would fail four times before they would hit once.

Firelocks striking on a wheel were considered as less often failing to "give fire" than the snaphance or petronel, with the flint lock striking on a steel.

Pay and Food.

It is frequently remarked that the purchasing power of money was much greater in early days than now, and therefore that labour, although receiving a smaller nominal amount in coin, was really much better paid. The argument being that sixpence a day was equal to say twenty times that amount now, and so presumably purchased twenty times as much. Economic studies of this sort seem always to overlook the exact something which, on close examination shows itself and ruins the argument; such conclusions are often found to be deceptive and erroneous.

In 1281, a knight and esquire received 12*d.* a day, an archer 2*d.* The pay of the Elizabethan foot soldier was 8*d.* a day, or 4*s.* 8*d.* a week, and the horseman had 12*d.* a day. From this they paid for food and lodging. How was this done?

First, there was a Victual Master, or Provaunt, or Purveyor, who it was considered should be of the best sort of gentleman "having in him both the dignity of blood, and the glory of virtue." He was not to sell at a profit, and was to be one who understood—powdering, turning, cleansing, and drying, "so to keep victuals sound and sweet, and be the soldier's best physician." Upon his skill and dexterity, the men very much or entirely depended. The food supplied was bread, biscuit, cheese, butter, fish, beef, bacon, meal, and peas. Rations seem sometimes to have cost 4*d.* a day, and 1*d.* for drink, or 2*s.* 11*d.* per week. The balance could remain for future settlement, and towards payment for "furniture" or apparell. The captain was not to be covetous nor retain the soldiers' pay, but rather to distribute all advantages, "dead pay," and "capifoldi." Any soldier who received his month in advance and left without serving for it, was adjudged to die.

The following gives the cost of rations, the calculations for a garrison made by the purveyor actually in office

The Bakehouse.

The soldier to have 1 lb. wheaten bread for 1*d.*, or 1½ lb. of good white bread for 1½*d.*

A bushel of good wheat meal weighing 56 lbs. would make 72 lbs. of household bread, and would take in liquor, if weighed within twenty-four hours after baking, 16 lbs.

By taking 7 lbs. of bran from a bushel of good meal weighing 56 lbs., the 49 lbs. remaining would make in good wheaten bread 63 lbs., and the paste being used for ordinary biscuit, would make 42 lbs. By taking away 3½ lbs. more bran, the 45½ lbs. remaining would make in white bread 42 lbs., or in white biscuits 28 lbs.

The Brewhouse.

The soldier to have a wine quart of double beer for ½*d.*, or a wine pottle (half a gallon) for 1*d.*, and of strong beer a wine quart for ¾*d.*, a wine pottle for 1½*d.* If the price of malt should rise, then must the beer be smaller, the water, "the brewer's friend for gain," to make up the extra charge.

To make a tun (about 240 gallons) double beer, take:—

10 bushels of malt.
1 bushel of wheat.
½ bushel of oats.
7 lbs. of hops at 20*s.*

For a tun of strong beer, take:—

8 bushels of malt.
2 bushels of wheat.
1 bushel of oats.
7½ lbs. of hops.

Provisions.

An ox cost £3; a sheep 6*s.* 8*d.*; hogs 8*s.* 4*d.* each. Butter 2½*d.* lb.; cheese 2*d.* lb.

Beef.—A common man, 1 lb. a day at 1½*d.*; the others 1½ lb.

Mutton.—A common man, 1lb. a day at 2*d.*; the others 1½ lb.

Pork.—A common man, 1 lb. a day at 1½*d.*; the others 1⅞ lb.

Stock Fish.—Common men, to every four men a stock fish for wednesdays, two meals a day. The same for fridays; the others to every four 1½ stock fish.

Shetland Ling.—For twenty-six saturdays, thirteen days in Lent, and one day in Rogation week, to every eight men one ling a day; the others, one and a half at 7*d.* the ling.

Shetland Cod.—For the same days, one fish and a half a day at 4*d.* the fish; the others, two fish and a quarter a day.

Butter.—Every four men, 1 lb. a day on wednesdays, two meals a day, half service. Every eight men 1 lb. a day, quarter service for saturdays, and in Lent, and two days in Rogation week, at 4*d.* the lb.; the others 1½ lb. a day.

Cheese.—The common men for saturdays, in Lent, and two Rogation days, for every four men 1lb., quarter service, at 2*d.* lb.; the others every four men 1½ lb.

The food was dressed, and each man paid 2*s.* 8*d.* a week for his diet, lodging, and washing. Of this 3½*d.* a day or 2*s.* a week was for food, and 8*d.* a week for lodging and washing. The "bigger sort" paid 4*s.* a week, 5¾*d.* a day or 3*s.* 4*d.* a week for food, and 8*d.* for lodging and washing. To married men their proportions could be delivered separately. To captains and gentlemen with their ordinary servants keeping house by themselves no proportion was delivered.

On a march when provisions had sometimes to be carried on horseback, the above diet necessarily had to be varied, and biscuit, boiled beef, cheese, and "the like" predominated. To sustain a man it was judged as "fit for a day's proportion," ½ lb. of biscuit, and ½ lb. of butter; or 1 lb. of bread and ½ lb. of beef or bacon; or ½ lb. of biscuit and 1 lb. of cheese; or ½ lb. of biscuit and four herrings; or 1 quart of peas boiled; or 1 pint of rice with ordinary allowance of biscuit; or 1 lb. biscuit and "poor john" (cheap or coarse fish salted and dried) between two men; or 2 lb. biscuit and a "haberdine" (salted cod) between four men.

The use of fish and fish days was not so much from religious motives, as for cheapness, and also with the idea of saving cattle. A state paper dealing with this subject tells that by having wednesday as a fish day "saveth eighty oxen at the least for that day, and what a commodity that is to the realm." Other calculations and estimates were made from time to time with the idea of substituting fish, oil, and peas, for beef and beer. In one such, considering the "rate for the dyett of a man for a fyshe day, and the difference in pryce for fleshe," it was shown that, half a stock fish which was the dearest fish as it would not "last long," would serve a man for a day, and so the cost per day would be 1*d.* By having butter and cheese instead of fish, ½ lb. butter in the dearest time (i.e. 3*d.* lb.), or 1 lb. cheese at 1½*d.* the pound, for one day the cost would be 1½*d.*, whereas beef or mutton would be double, viz., 3*d.*

The cost given of 4*d.* a day in one case and 3½*d.* in the other, may both have been right, as districts differed in those days in this respect, much more than now. Even the summer and winter price of butter would be sufficient to cause the difference. But as the man paid the fixed sum of two shillings a week for his cooked rations, he had no trouble on this head. Accepting 3½*d.* a day, a rather close calculation, as the cost for food the plan may be worked out as—per week :—

Bread. 1 lb. a day at 1*d.*—7 days	=	7*d.*
Butter. ¼ lb. a day—7 days ...	=	4½*d.*
Meat. 1 lb. a day at 1½*d.*—5 days	=	7½*d.*
Fish. 2 days	=	2*d.*
Lodging and washing—7 days ...	=	8*d.*
		2*s.* 8*d.*

To this, beer could be had at a halfpenny a quart. There is no mention of vegetables if the passing note on boiled peas be excepted.

A soldier being furrierd (forayered) and lodged in a house was allowed the best bed and chamber save one, fair sheets, board, cloths, plates, napkins, towels, dressing his meat, service at table, oil, vinegar, salt, mustard, candle light, fire, etc.

CANNON.

It seems strange there should be no mention of cannon or artillery in our return. The "gunner" therein mentioned carried a caliver or arquebus, and it will be noticed that the number of gunners in each hundred agreed with the number of calivers in stock. Yet there were cannon for the field and for the battery, but as a fact it was too unwieldy, its movements too difficult for use. Still it would be expected that, on the coast, some of these would be found. It would seem that there was no separate class of men for this service as now, the guns must have been served by the men available.

In 1521 was produced the first piece of brass ordnance and of this material the heavier battery pieces of this time were made. In 1547, 1 Edwd. VI. ordnance of divers sorts were first made of cast iron. The field pieces extended perhaps to about nine pounders, then the larger sizes became "cannon of battery." They bore different fancy names, not given as now from the weight of shot or diameter of bore, but from the fashion or custom of casting the form of some beast or bird upon them, such as we find the culverin and the basilisk.

The following list, fairly complete, will give a good idea of the position at this time.

Name.	Weight of gun.	Diameter of bore.	Diameter of shot.	Weight of shot.	Powder.
	lbs.	ins.	ins.	lbs.	lbs.
Robinet	200	1½	1	1	½
Falconet	500	2	1¼	2	2
Falcon	800	2½	2¼	2½	2½
Minion	1,100	3¼	3	4½	4½
Saker	1,500	3½	3¼	5	5
Demi Culverin	3,000	4½	4	9	9
Culverin	4,000	5½	5¼	18	18
Demi Cannon	6,000	6½	6⅜	30	28
Cannon	7,000	8	7⅜	60	44
Cannon royal	8,000	7	6⅜	42	20
Basilisk	9,000	8⅜	8¼	60	60

These names or some of them were retained for some time, but the piece was not exactly the same as the weights in after years differed somewhat. To draw a saker or sacre, which was the favourite field gun, required twelve beasts ; to draw a culverin twenty-four ; and a cannon thirty. Eight beasts in a two-wheeled cart would draw one ton, and in a waggon with four wheels thirty cwt. up to two tons. Besides the cannon there were for battery use mortar pieces, eleven to nineteen inches across at the mouth, throwing a hollow shot of cast iron stuffed with "firework," with screws to receive a match to fire and break the same in small pieces whereof the smallest piece would "kill a man or spoil him." Tin cases filled with musket shot were used for the smaller guns.

MUSKETEERS.

The musket too is not mentioned in our certificate as then not being in use, but just from this date it became more and more adopted, and requires notice here.

The barrel or "cannon" of the musket was four feet and a half long, the bore larger, and the bullet heavier than with the arquebus, but as arms could not as now be made in any number to one pattern, there was here again no certain uniformity either in length or bore or bullet. The barrel was often "ranforced," strengthened or thickened at the breech, which made the weapon still heavier and more clumsy. Musketeers were therefore chosen from men, strong, square, of good solid build, and well-knit constitutions, and they were well apparelled, with morrion (an iron head piece) and other necessaries. The dread of musketry fire caused armour generally to be made heavier so that it could not be borne for long, not perhaps a couple of hours. Besides that such armour fretted the slashed or "blistered" costume of the time, it further blistered the men's shoulders; these had consequently to be "bombasted" or protected by stuffed or padded collars to "defend the poise." With passing time the coming disuse of armour may be traced as the men finding it thus burdensome and a hindrance to movement often threw it away.

Such a long heavy weapon as the musket could not be held up and fired without a support for the barrel. The plan adopted was a rest of suitable height for the man, made sometimes of iron but generally of wood, forked at one end to take the barrel and shod with pointed iron at the other to enter the ground and stand firmly. Strings were attached to the forked end that it might be trailed on the fingers or carried for relief. A very troublesome encumbrance. When stationary, by placing the barrel on the rest some good effect could be worked in suitable places, but for skirmishing the weapon was of no service. Thus at first the musketeers were placed in the company behind the pikes where they must have been quite useless until the front was cleared.

The early way of charging or loading was from a flask, but later this was done from a "bandroll." "Soldiers of our time," wrote one, "have hanging about their necks upon a baudrick or border, or at their girdles, certain pipes which they call charges, of copper and tin made with covers." The elder generation, again, disliked this innovation, asserting that the powder was often shed and lost by wind or otherwise in loading so that the bullet was sometimes put in alone, the powder being gone. A good flask, it was argued, the neck holding just one charge, the spring being made to open and cover quickly and close, was more warlike and ready in service. The man also carried at his girdle a touch box, and a powder flask with fine dry powder for priming, and a "purse" or bullet-bag with a mould and fire iron for casting. Bullets were supposed to be twelve to 1 lb. of lead, but some were ten to the 1 lb.; there was no regularity. This variation in bore was met by the use of small bullets. As showing the curious irregularities, it was suggested that every ten musketeers should have a mould to cast two sorts of bullets, one for full-sized bullets and the other for two or three bores smaller, the mould to be large enough to cast at one time besides the bullets, eight "hail shot of warr" of the size of small pistol bullets, as a musket when charged with five or six such hail shot and fired within fifteen or twenty paces terrified, wounded, or killed, more horses and men than ten volleys at three hundred or even one hundred paces. In loading, brown paper was thrust in on the powder, then the hail shot or bullet, and then more paper. This was driven home by a scouring stick or ramrod which formed a rammer at one end, and at the other had a screw or worm for extracting a charge. All well enough when the bullet was of the right size so that it fell down the barrel smoothly and was duly driven close to the powder, but, as it was often four or five sizes smaller than the bore and many even then thrust nothing in after it, the man had to look well to his piece and keep the mouth or muzzle upwards or the bullet would fall out. It will be readily understood that with the very weak powder of the time there could be much firing with but little hurt.

The chief movements in the musket drill were :—

Standing
- "Rest your musket."
- "Your sentinel posture."
- "Your saluting posture."

Marching
- "Your musket shouldered.
- "Rest in your right hand."
- "Level. Slope."

Charging
- "Clear your pan."
- "Prime your pan."
- "Shut your pan."
- "Cast off your loose powder."
- "Blow your pan."
- "Cast about your musket with both hands and trail your rest."

Charging

"Open your charges."
"Charge your musket with powder."
"Draw out your scouring stick."
"Shorten your stick."
"Ram in your powder."
"Draw out your stick."
"Charge with bullet."
"Ram in your bullet."
"Draw out your stick."
"Shorten your stick and put it up."
"Bring your musket forward with the left hand."
"Hold it up with your right hand and recover your rest."

Discharging

"Carry your rest in your left hand preparing to give fire."
"Slope your musket and let your rest sink."
"In your right hand poise your musket with the rest."
"In the right hand take your match between the second finger and the thumb."
"Hold your match fast and blow it."
"Cock your match."
"Guard your pan and blow your match."
"Open your pan."
"Present your musket."
"Give fire."
"Dismount your musket and carry it with your left hand."
"Uncock your match and put it up between your fingers."

The cock, or serpentine, as it was also called, was made with a holder of convenient size to receive the match, and the spring strong enough, so that, in falling, it made the fire on the match sparkle and ignite the powder. In skirmishing, the left hand held the match and musket, the right hand being clear for charging and discharging. One bullet for the next charge was kept in the mouth, a troublesome practice, hardly serving any sufficient purpose to warrant it. The number of motions for loading and firing may be put in consecutive form. First the man with his special powder primed and closed the pan by the touch hole, then having blown off any waste powder and cast about or brought the musket upright he took from his bandolier a box or case with the charge of powder, then with his teeth he opened the charge by pulling off the lid or cover, poured the powder into the barrel and gave the musket a jog on the ground to shake the powder close to or through the touch hole, then with the "scouring stick" he rammed down some paper and holding the ramrod shortened, he next took the bullet from his mouth dropped it into the barrel and with some more paper pushed it home. Having returned the rod to its place down the outside the barrel, he took the musket in the right hand, then taking the rest in the left hand and fixing it in the ground he placed the musket on it, took the match in his right hand between finger and thumb, and blew the coal or lighted end. Next, the barrel being supported by the rest, the match was placed in the cock which had to be opened to receive it and this done the coal received another blow, the man guarding the pan with his fingers to protect the powder therein. Then with the second finger of the right hand he opened or drew aside the pan cover, thus exposing the priming powder to the lighted match, presented, that is, took aim, and fired; the barrel being always on the rest. After removing the rest, the match was withdrawn from the cock and passed to the left hand, the pan being at the same time wiped out with the right thumb, blown into, cleaned, and closed. When on the march paper was stuffed into the pan and touch hole, and at the girdle two proyning pins were carried to clear the touch hole in case of need. The musket was to be kept bright and clean within and the pan cover close. The match was so boiled in ashes, lye, and powder that it would burn well, carry a long coal, and not break off with a hard touch of the finger. It was recommended that each man should carry in his pocket a little bag with a small steel and flint upon necessity to strike a light, with a piece of a "certain kind of tinder like a sponge."

The common use of the musket introduced some changes or modifications in drill formations. The square was retained, the pikes being in the middle with the muskets in front and on the flanks. To clear the front the order was :—

"Ranks open forward paces five."
"Open the files feet three."
"Followers pass through."

The front being clear and the ranks open, the first rank fixed the rests in the ground, and on the order—discharge, retire and advance—fired and retired to the rear to reload, when the second rank advanced, passing through the first to the rests left fixed in the ground, and using them fired and in turn retired, the third rank now advancing, and so on until all had fired, keeping up a continual firing so to annoy the enemy "in terrible sort." Firing volleys was condemned as besides that this served only to make "a great crack," the hindmost rank risked shooting their comrades in front and also a mounted enemy could be upon them before they had reloaded.

When all archers had been provided with muskets England soon "waxed as skilful" with the new weapon as with the old, and clumsy as it was it long held its own. By presently adding the bayonet it thus ousted the pike, and with some few other improvements, retaining in its name its date of origin, came down to our own time as the yet well remembered once familiar weapon commonly known as Brown Bess.
